8. A War Memorial

At the archeological site of Troy, to the south of Istanbul, there is little to remind people of the great historical events portrayed in the Iliad. There is, however, a giant replica of a wooden Trojan Horse, which tourists can climb, producing one of the worst, tackiest photo ops. You are going to change all of that.

- Design a suitable war memorial for the Trojan War. Be specific about what materials (wood should be the essential ingredient) would be used and research the topography of the countryside so that the design fits in ecologically. "Fire" could play a main element in the design, since the city was destroyed by fire. Designers are encouraged to stay away, as much as possible, from "the predictable horse thing." Subtle equine references are, of course, encouraged.
- Plan an event where the monument will be unveiled, publicly.
